

New arts space, hub for youths opens in Seattle's King Street Station

Nov. 12, 2023 at 6:00 am | Updated Nov. 12, 2023 at 6:00 am

From left, Olisa Enrico, executive director of the Cultural Space Agency; Daniel Pak, co-founder and executive director of Totem Star; city of Seattle Councilmember Tammy Morales; Amy Lillard, executive director of... (Karen Ducey / The Seattle Times) More ▾

By  Dominic Gates
Seattle Times staff reporter

The hustle of travelers on the trains that stop at Seattle's historic King Street train station is set to merge with the bustle of young musicians, artists and theater groups.

Five youth-focused community organizations celebrated the opening Saturday of a new dedicated arts and culture space at the train station — a redbrick architectural gem with a prominent clock tower, open since 1906.

A group of young Native Americans from the Red Eagle Soaring theater group performed at the event before about 300 guests.

"We know who we are. We're born from the stars," they sang. "And our story has only just begun."

Youth from Red Eagle Soaring performs during the grand opening of Station Space, at King Street Station, on Saturday, November 11, 2023. Station Space is a new arts space that will be a hub for youth creativity at King Street Station. Red Eagle Soaring will have a black box theater that will provide the urban Native community access to performances, and training in multi-disciplinary arts from theater to videography. (Karen Ducey / The Seattle Times)

Russell Brooks (Southern Cheyenne), executive director of Red Eagle Soaring, standing in front of the plans for their future home in King Street Station. (Photo: Vee Hua)

TEAM

GC: Sellen

Mechanical Engineer: Ecotope

Holiday-Parks installed water-cooled VRF, ERV OSA duct distribution, HVAC Controls and Plumbing for new restrooms and break sinks.

Team: Nate W, Jennifer S, John S, Joe M, David B, Morgan Z, Tyler J, Ken W and Engwin C.